Alabama Association for Developmental Education

Evaluation Criteria and Nomination Process for Awards

The Kellogg Institute Scholarship

The Kellogg Institute is an intensive four week-long workshop on current topics and state-of-the-art strategies for efficient operation of developmental and learning assistance programs. ALADE provides a stipend to assist in defraying expenses.

Criteria for evaluation:

• ALADE membership

• three or more years as an educator or administrator in a developmental education program

• current employment as an educator or administrator in a developmental education program

• anticipated impact of how participation in the Kellogg Institute will contribute to personal professional development and to the developmental education program in which the nominee is currently employed

• personal or institutional support to supplement cost of attending the Kellogg Institute

• support from supervisors, colleagues, and/or students

Directions for application:

• letter of application (limit of two pages) stating
- length of membership in ALADE,

- number of years experience in developmental education,

- how participation in the Kellogg Institute will contribute to personal professional development and to the developmental education program in which the nominee is currently employed

- letter of administrative financial support or other assurance of financial commitment for the nominee to attend the Kellogg Institute (limit of one page)

- two letters of support from supervisors, colleagues, and/or students (limit of one page per letter)